RESILIENCE, BALANCE & MEANING

If you work in a high stress and trauma-exposed field, this guide is for you. It is designed as a practical, realistic and effective approach to help you build a more resilient, balanced and meaningful life.

Dr. Patricia Fisher has done it again. This comprehensive, highly accessible workbook for individuals beautifully complements her first workbook for work groups. Fisher seamlessly integrates the current research from organizational development, stress, trauma, management theory, and psychophysiology to offer clear, direct descriptions of risk and resilience factors for people engaged in trauma work. The book includes excellent questionnaires for self-reflection, encouraging readers to attend to details of the way they work and how their work affects them. The extensive reference list is a bonus for clinicians and scholars. An invaluable resource for those who are new to trauma work and for more experienced workers alike.

Laurie Anne Pearlman, Ph.D., Clinical Psychologist. Co-author, Treating Traumatic Bereavement: A Practitioner's Guide

Resilience, burnout, compassion fatigue—these terms are in constant use in trauma serving workplaces. But for everyone talking about it, Dr. Fisher is doing something about it. And this book will help us do something about it. More than concepts—this book offers what we have been looking for: realistic and effective approaches for those of us exposed to indirect and direct trauma.

Brian C. Miller, Ph.D., Director, Children's Program. Behavioral Health Services, Intermountain Primary Children's Hospital, Salt Lake City, UT

Dr. Patricia Fisher's work is quite simply brilliant. She continues to provide the field with research-based, practical resources that provide individuals and supervisors guidance in creating sustainable practices. This new workbook fills the gap that exists for managers and supervisors to understand the effects of workplace stress and provides assessments and reflection activities that managers and individual professionals may use to create healthier workplaces. Thank you Pat for continuing to share your wisdom and brilliance with professionals working in trauma exposed workplaces.
